

Topics Include: Values, Interest Inventory, Internet-Supply & Demand and Validation of Career Choice

Career Discovery is an exploratory process where an individual will "discover" or support their career values and their career choices through assessments. The participant will then have demonstrated what career fields exist and which match their values and interests. They will learn what information is on the Internet to support their choices, what back grounds they should have, and what training is available. The goal is to equip each participant with the tools necessary to pursue a new career or to advance in an existing one.
